

ABSTRACT

At birth, all alike have an enormous potential, depending on our status of being human. In the first six years of life, our brain has a capacity for learning and development of intelligence in all its aspects without intrinsic limits. The only constraints we are usually adults, for a limited time, ignorance or mistaken beliefs do not provide adequate stimulation or in sufficient quantity. For early stimulation is adequate must be comprehensive (covering the aspects intellectual, emotional and social simultaneously), take into account the limitations of the senses and make learning the peculiarities of this period. For an infant, the best conditions of stimulation with the aforementioned characteristics are only achieved at home with their own parents or guardians to be teachers. This topic will introduce the fundamentals and benefits of this type of stimulation. In humans the experience of an emotion usually involves a set of cognitions, attitudes and beliefs about the world we use to evaluate a particular situation and therefore influences the way in which one perceives the situation. It is important to perform work that supports and deepens the degree of attention that studying these emotions in their expression and manifestations produced in children. In addition to allowing adequate management and control them. During the course of this work took into account the stated objectives such as to characterize, analyze and determine the influence of emotions in the different contexts in which they operate to lay the guide to make early learning in children five years the first year of basic education in our educational sector and is the No. 5 Canton UTE Pimampiro. On the other hand it seeks to involve teachers of different educational institutions that have been taken into account as well as a guide for parents, school and community in general to give an assessment most assertive about why and what work emotions in children taking into account expression thereof received in their lives. Positively stimulate a child is also educated with good roots. Early education is to enhance the sensitive periods, which are appropriate times in which the child assimilates certain learning easier. Hence the importance of early education, which is based on knowing where to focus educational efforts by the ages of the children and encouraging them properly.